The Director of Training's mandate to give professional supervision and support to training programs conducted abroad naturally involved the delegation of many of the ensuant responsibilities to the Operations School, with its general charter to serve the Clandestine Services. In 1955, to supply the growing needs of the supply the growing needs of the supply the growing needs of the services. In 1955, to supply the growing needs of the services programs, the Operations School established its non-teaching branch, Overseas Training.

Overseas Training represented the Director of Training in the day-to-day working relationship with the Far East Division in support in of Inaddition, An important function was the furnishing of training papers for overseas training of all kinds, from the large formal programs to supplying a case officer with material to train a singleton agent. Material was collected from many sources, largely but not exclusively within OTR. A substantial amount of it was found to be suitable only for background use, and the office took on the job of preparing papers in formats appropriate for the varied uses to be made of them. The work involved ranged from minor editorial changes to existing papers, to the virtual creation of wholly new material.

For several years the production of materia was an important Branch function, and a quantity of it was developed.

likewise did a good deal of editorial work, and its efforts have enriched the files of Overseas Training. Overseas Training also endeavored to keep abreast of what was being developed by other sources, and thus developed wide contacts in the Intelligence Community as a whole as well as with other Agency components.

In 1960, the Inspector General, after a review of the Branch, recommended that "DTR redesignate his Overseas Training Staff to better reflect its expanding function as a clearing house for training doctrine ...." Following the DDCI's approval of this recommendation 12 in March 1961, the subject of change of name and redefinition of functions was discussed at considerable length, culminating in late August 1961 with the renaming of the Branch as the Training Assistance Staff. It remained under the Operations School, though its functions were gradually broadened to include support as well as other branches of the Operations School. Where capabilities existed, TAS gave support as well to other OTR components.

Replacements for personnel transferring or retiring have been virtually nil since 1963. The lack of a staff to produce the new items that in the past had been a means of keeping TAS's "public" aware of its services contributed to a consistent downward trend in the number of CS requirements levied on TAS. Coversely, the Staff to some extent worked itself out of a job through the years by having produced and given wind wide distribution to a number of the standard itse. Below are listed some of most important items as which the Overseas Branch/Training Assistance Staff has produced, together with some approximate, though reasonably accurate, figures on their distribution from the date of production through September 1967. An asterisk designates those papers which are substantially the work of TAS. Other papers received primarily light-to-medium editorial treatment, having been originated by others.
